

Clone-a-willy

I didn't know where to start with this thing, so it's lucky that it comes complete with a comprehensive instruction leaflet that must have been written by the same illiterate imbecile who writes the instructions for Ikea from the safe confines of a padded cell and without the use of any implement sharper than a crayon! However, the problem is that at least with Ikea you can ignore the instructions, employ a lump hammer and some six-inch nails and end up with some sort of assembled bits of wood that, if you're lucky, may loosely approximate to a piece of furniture. There is no such guarantee with 'Clone-a-Willy'.

As all men out there know, you can't ever be certain of achieving that 'perfect' erection on demand, and this is precisely what you are required to do with this kit. A stark warning is given in step 3 of the instructions: 'When Ready to Mold: You have a MAXIMUM of only 2 minutes to mix the Molding Powder and Water AND insert your erect penis. Be QUICK!' 'Nuff said, eh guys?

Anyway, that's what I thought before I tried it. I am man enough, as my 'clone' would prove – had it not already been devoured – to admit that my presumptions were wrong. The advice given to 'Have someone help', 'Be prepared', and 'Use a penis pump/penis ring' is sound stuff, and this thing really is a great laugh – especially as a gift for almost anyone – a boyfriend, a girlfriend or a couple.

The kit even comes complete with a tiny plastic thermometer to get the melting temperature spot on. (Interesting little fact, one of the main reasons why chocolate is so erotic, is that the standard product melts at precisely human body temperature!)

I only have one criticism of an otherwise fun product, and that is that it is produced in America (hence the American spellings) so the 'chocolate' component is really a chocolate-flavoured substance – rather more like a Hershey Bar than our far superior proper European CHOCOLATE! But I'm being picky and pretentious here. Have a go, but make sure you read, re-read and re-read again all of the instructions before you start. Price. Rather expensive, at round £24.95 – for what it is.

Born to Buck

As always in this magazine, we tell the truth. And we have to say that none of our staff or reviewers have had the nerve, stamina or pain-threshold to really test this monster. It is from a range of butt plugs and man rammers, made from what is claimed to be super-sensitive ultra-smooth Hardtex material, that vary in size, design and colour. The one that we are currently using in the SHM office as a doorstop, is 10 inches in length and has a maximum girth of a little over 9 inches. Some witty editorial in the advertising blurb says: '....pick the one that's right for you and never look back.' Not looking back is probably wise advice for the faint-hearted! This potentially lethal weapon also has a strong cord attached to the base - we're not quite sure if that is to hang it up with or as a safety measure in case there's a risk of it getting lost. Whoever you are, a lot of lube would be advisable. Currently available for around £19.95 a saving on the RRP of £15.00.

Doc Johnson Vac-U-Lock System

This is a very comprehensive and well made strap-on system. While the 'harness' and attachments are clearly intended for FF situations, it could also equally well be used in a MF situation where, maybe, the male was having erection problems. But we tested it in its primary role of FF fun.

Firstly, you need the harness. In our case we tried out the 'Ultra Harness 2 and plug' which is made of a fabric and vinyl construction. There is a newer model on the market – the 'Ultra harness 3000' that is all leather. Functionally, they are identical. They both come with an easy to attach plug that acts as the fitment for the various accessories, are open-crotch for quick and comfortable switchover from one to the other, and have adjustable straps to accommodate up to a 44-inch waist.

After fixing the plug to the strap, you need powder lube (not supplied) to attach the dildo of your choice. Once you've done this, don the harness, adjust for fit and comfort and you're ready for action.

There are almost twenty different accessories available, including a double-dong plug, a rider ball and a double-penetrator for those who like front and back entry at the same time. We just tried out the 6-inch and 7-inch standard dongs. We have to say, the whole system was quick and comfortable to put on and the accessories were easily interchangeable. The overall effect is close to that of a real shag – but with the benefit that it can last a whole lot longer and can be more easily controlled to give maximum pleasure to the recipient.

There was only one real complaint – while we both achieved what we set out to – several times in fact – we felt that the dongs were just a very tiny bit on the soft side. But they are well sculpted – some even come with moulded balls – and once you really get going you almost forget that it is not the real thing.

All in all, it was such fun that we've used it several more times since writing this review and will continue to do so.
